3 INTRODUCTION

4 Chapter 7¹ debtors Christopher Michael Marino and Valerie 5 Margaret Marino sought sanctions against creditor Ocwen Loan 6 Servicing, LLC ("Ocwen") for its violation of the discharge 7 injunction. The bankruptcy court held a trial and awarded the 8 Marinos $119,000 - one thousand dollars for each improper 9 contact.

10 On appeal, Ocwen argues that the bankruptcy court erred
11 because its correspondence with the Marinos was in compliance 12 with state or federal law. It also contends that the court 13 improperly considered telephone calls, which were not the subject 14 of the motion and not supported by evidence, and that there was 15 no evidence of injury to the Marinos. We discern no error and 16 AFFIRM.

17 The Marinos cross-appeal, correctly arguing that the 18 bankruptcy court erred in holding that it lacked the authority to 19 award punitive damages. On this point, we VACATE and REMAND so 20 the bankruptcy court can consider whether it would be appropriate 21 to (a) enter a final judgment for "relatively mild 22 noncompensatory fines," (b) issue, for the district court's 23 consideration, proposed findings and a recommended judgment for 24 punitive damages, or (c) refer the issue of contempt to the 1 district court.

2 FACTUAL BACKGROUND

3 A. The Marininos' chapter 7 petition

4 The Marininos filed a chapter 7 bankruptcy petition in March 5 2013 in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the District of 6 Nevada. They scheduled real property located in Verdi, 7 California (the "Property") and noted, "DEBTOR TO SURRENDER."²
8 GMAC Mortgage held a secured claim arising from a second mortgage 9 on the Property.

10 The Marininos received their discharge on June 18, 2013. The 11 bankruptcy court subsequently granted Deutsche Bank National 12 Trust Company, as Trustee for GMACM Mortgage Loan Trust 2005-AR6
13 ("Deutsche Bank") relief from the automatic stay. The court 14 closed the case on September 23, 2013.

15 B. Written correspondence and telephone calls from Ocwen

16 Following the Marininos' discharge, Ocwen, as the servicer for 17 Deutsche Bank, began sending the Marininos mailed correspondence in 18 June 2013 and continued to do so through April 2015. The letters 19 included account statements, notices regarding force-placed 20 insurance, escrow statements, and other matters.

21 Some of the items of correspondence contained disclaimers 22 that were located at the bottom of a page or end of the letter in 23 small font. A typical disclaimer read: "If you have filed for 24 bankruptcy and your case is still active and/or if you received a 25

26 ² Mr. Marino later attested that they had moved out of the 27 Property in late 2011. When they filed their bankruptcy petition 28 in 2013, the Marininos were living in Reno, Nevada. They have since moved to Auburn, California.

1 discharge, please be advised that this notice is for information 2 purposes only and is not an attempt to collect a pre-petition or 3 discharged debt." Often, the disclaimers were preceded by 4 demands for payment by a certain date or information about the 5 amount that "you must pay" in a much more conspicuous font.

6 Ocwen also called the Marinos numerous times post-discharge
7 to request payment on their mortgage loan.

8 C. The motion for contempt

9 In November 2015, the Marinos filed a motion to reopen their 10 case and to hold Ocwen in contempt for its alleged violation of 11 the discharge injunction ("Motion for Contempt"). They argued 12 that Ocwen knowingly and willfully violated the discharge 13 injunction by sending the written correspondence after the 14 Marinos' discharge. They identified twenty-two instances of 15 allegedly improper correspondence³ whereby Ocwen sought to 16 collect from the Marinos personally.

17 In opposition to the Motion for Contempt, Ocwen argued that 18 sanctions were not warranted because the letters were not meant 19 to collect any debt against the Marinos personally and complied 20 with federal and state law. It said that fourteen of the twenty-21 two letters contained disclaimer language stating that the 22 letters were intended for informational purposes only, not to 23 collect any debt. It argued that billing statements did not 24 violate the discharge injunction under California law because 25 they sought only voluntary payments. It contended that the

26
27 28 ³ In their moving papers, the Marinos only mentioned the written correspondence, not telephone calls.

1 remaining correspondence concerned force-placed insurance, escrow
2 information, or debt validation, not collection of a debt.

3 D. Evidentiary hearing

4 The bankruptcy court reopened the case and held an 5 evidentiary hearing on the Motion for Contempt. At the outset, 6 and by agreement of the parties, the court found "that Ocwen was 7 aware of the bankruptcy, was aware of the discharge, got stay
8 relief, and sent the various letters." The only remaining issues 9 were Ocwen's intent and damages.

10 Mr. Marino testified that the Property was their "dream 11 house," but they faced financial difficulty starting in 2010.
12 They unsuccessfully tried to work with GMAC and Ocwen to modify 13 their mortgage payments, but eventually moved out in 2011.

14 After they filed for chapter 7 bankruptcy and received their 15 discharge in mid-2013, the Marinos began to receive letters from 16 Ocwen "stating that there was money due." The correspondence 17 included account statements with attached payment stubs and 18 demands for payment. Mr. Marino testified that the payment stubs 19 indicated that he had to remit payment on the discharged debt, 20 that he was responsible for the interest payments, and that 21 payments were due by the stated dates. Ocwen also sent notices 22 of force-placed insurance, which made Mr. Marino think that he 23 had to pay for the insurance on the Property, even though they 24 had surrendered and vacated it.

25 Mr. Marino said that the notices from Ocwen took a toll on 26 his marriage and caused him to fight with his wife. He said that 27 he suffered from anxiety attacks and felt humiliated, tormented, 28 and harassed. He testified that the stress eventually made them

1 contemplate divorce, although they managed to preserve their 2 marriage.

3 Mrs. Marino testified that the letters and calls from Ocwen
4 caused distress to the point that she and her husband considered
5 divorce. She stated that she began having severe stomach pains 6 when they tried to modify the mortgage loan; those pains 7 disappeared when they filed for bankruptcy, but reemerged when 8 they began receiving calls post-discharge. In June 2014, she 9 noted in writing that Ocwen was "calling me three to five times a 10 day" for approximately a year. At trial, she did not provide an 11 exact number of calls that she received, but testified:

12 Q Okay. I don't want to go -- it sounds like you got 13 anywhere from 60 to 100 calls. Does that sound --

14 A It was a lot of calls, yes.

15 She also stated, "I probably answered maybe a handful of phone 16 calls, probably maybe -- it's hard to think of a number in that 17 time. I mean, 20, I don't know. It seems to me that after a 18 while, I was just -- I couldn't take it anymore."

19 A friend of the Marinos, Bernadette O'Kane, testified about 20 her observations of the Marinos during their financial distress.
21 Ms. O'Kane stated that Mrs. Marino became sad and upset due to 22 dealing with creditors, started suffering stomach pains, and told 23 Ms. O'Kane that her marital relationship had become strained.
24 Ms. O'Kane said that Mr. Marino was previously fun-loving but 25 became agitated and angry.

26 Ms. O'Kane said that, following the discharge, the Marinos 27 were not able to move on with their lives, because "the calls 28 [from creditors] did not stop." She said that the calls made

1 Mrs. Marino cry; when Ms. O'Kane on occasion picked up such 2 calls, the caller would assume that she was Mrs. Marino and 3 repeatedly ask for payment.

4 Sony Prudent, a senior loan analyst for Ocwen, testified as 5 to Ocwen's loan servicing procedure. He stated that Ocwen keeps 6 a comment log of all contacts with a borrower and that Owen might 7 still send notices post-discharge pursuant to federal or state
8 regulation, but that there would be a bankruptcy disclaimer 9 stating that the letter was not an attempt to collect a debt "if 10 you've been discharged or in active bankruptcy."

11 Mr. Prudent stated that he reviewed the Marinos' file before 12 testifying, including the transaction history and comment logs.
13 He testified that the comment logs reflect that Ocwen called the 14 Marinos post-discharge but that it did not make any calls to the 15 Marinos after the Property was foreclosed (approximately two 16 years after the court granted Ocwen stay relief).

17 The court repeatedly questioned Mr. Prudent as to why post-18 discharge letters might still say, "you must pay." Mr. Prudent 19 had no direct answer but stated, "[b]est answer, Your Honor, is 20 it would be a generic letter." He later said, "[i]t is an 21 internal policy, Your Honor." He also admitted that "[m]ost of 22 [the letters] are generated by our system" and were never 23 reviewed by a human being.

24 The bankruptcy court ordered additional briefing regarding 25 the correspondence, asking Ocwen to cite the specific statute or 26 regulation authorizing each document. Ocwen cited the applicable 27 regulatory or statutory basis that allegedly applied to some of 28 its correspondence: 12 C.F.R. § 1024.37(c) (required notice of

1 force-placed insurance),⁴ 12 U.S.C. §§ 2605 and 2609 (required
2 notice of escrow account balance),⁵ 15 U.S.C. § 1692g (required
3 notice of debt validation information),⁶ and California Civil

5 ⁴ Before charging for force-placed insurance, a servicer 6 must:

7 (i) Deliver to a borrower or place in the mail a 8 written notice containing the information required by 9 paragraph (c) (2) of this section at least 45 days 10 before a servicer assesses on a borrower such charge or 11 fee;

12 (ii) Deliver to the borrower or place in the mail a 13 written notice in accordance with paragraph (d) (1) of 14 this section

15 ⁵ 12 U.S.C. § 2609(b) states:

16 Notification of shortage in escrow account. If the 17 terms of any federally related mortgage loan require 18 the borrower to make payments to the servicer . . . of 19 the loan for deposit into an escrow account for the 20 purpose of assuring payment of taxes, insurance 21 premiums, and other charges with respect to the 22 property, the servicer shall notify the borrower not 23 less than annually of any shortage of funds in the 24 escrow account.

25 ⁶ A debt collector shall send the consumer a written notice 26 stating:

27 (1) the amount of the debt;

28 (2) the name of the creditor to whom the debt is owed;

(3) a statement that unless the consumer, within thirty days after receipt of the notice, disputes the validity of the debt, or any portion thereof, the debt will be assumed to be valid by the debt collector;

(4) a statement that if the consumer notifies the debt collector in writing within the thirty-day period that the debt, or any portion thereof, is disputed, the debt

11 request within the thirty-day period, the debt 12 collector will provide the consumer with the name and 13 address of the original creditor, if different from the 14 current creditor.

15 ⁷ A mortgagee shall file a notice of default that includes 16 the following information:

17 (A) A statement identifying the mortgage or deed of 18 trust by stating the name or names of the trustor or 19 trustors and giving the book and page, or instrument 20 number, if applicable, where the mortgage or deed of 21 trust is recorded or a description of the mortgaged or 22 trust property.

23 (B) A statement that a breach of the obligation for 24 which the mortgage or transfer in trust is security has 25 occurred.

26 (C) A statement setting forth the nature of each breach 27 actually known to the beneficiary and of his or her 28 election to sell or cause to be sold the property to satisfy that obligation and any other obligation secured by the deed of trust or mortgage that is in default.

⁸ "A mortgage servicer shall contact the borrower in person or by telephone" prior to recording a notice of default or, if not possible, it must send written correspondence.

⁹ A mortgage servicer that offers foreclosure prevention alternatives shall send a written communication to the borrower that includes:

1 On June 20, 2016, the bankruptcy court announced its ruling
2 in favor of the Marinos. The court rejected Ocwen's defense that 3 the correspondence was authorized by state or federal law, 4 stating that, "I think if all they sent was what was required by 5 the notice [sic], they would be fine. But in each of those 6 cases, they included additional language, which indicated that 7 they were trying to collect money from the debtor."

8 The bankruptcy court held that the letters and phone calls 9 indicated that Ocwen was trying to get the Marinos to make 10 payments on their mortgage loan: "Ocwen could not have been doing 11 anything but trying to get the debtor to give them some more 12 money, either for insurance or agree to be responsible for the 13 house that was vacant, even after they had . . . received stay 14 relief." The court said that Ocwen purposefully waited two years 15 to foreclose on the Property, "hoping that if they sent enough 16 letters and gave enough calls, that the debtor would ultimately 17 pay them some money for something."

18 The court found the disclaimer language ineffective. It 19 said that the disclaimers stated, "if you have filed for 20 bankruptcy" and "if you have received a discharge," even though

22 ⁹(...continued)

23 (1) That the borrower may be evaluated for a 24 foreclosure prevention alternative or, if applicable, 25 foreclosure prevention alternatives.

26 (2) Whether an application is required to be submitted 27 by the borrower in order to be considered for a 28 foreclosure prevention alternative.

(3) The means and process by which a borrower may obtain an application for a foreclosure prevention alternative.

1 Ocwen knew that the Marinos had filed for bankruptcy and received 2 a discharge. It said that creditors that know that a debtor has 3 filed for bankruptcy, received a discharge, and surrendered their 4 home do not have "the right to have their computer gen out [sic] 5 these various letters, which do comply, at least in some of the 6 provisions, with the various notification statutes, but all of 7 which include language which is not included in those statutes, 8 which, to varying degrees of urgency, want the debtor to 9 undertake a new obligation or pay them money."

10 The court also found that Ocwen had called approximately a 11 hundred times following the discharge to ask the Marinos to pay 12 the discharged debt. It noted that Ocwen failed to rebut the 13 Marinos' testimony and failed to produce any records or evidence 14 to the contrary.

15 The bankruptcy court awarded the Marinos damages for 16 emotional distress, actual damages, and attorneys' fees and 17 costs. It stated that the Marinos had established that they had 18 suffered emotional distress as a result of Ocwen's harassing 19 calls and letters. The court found that Ocwen had sent nineteen 20 offending letters and made one hundred phone calls, and it 21 awarded $1,000 per letter and call as emotional distress damages.
22 The court entered an order ("Sanctions Order") awarding the 23 Marinos $119,000 in emotional distress damages.

24 Regarding an award of punitive damages, the court stated:
25 "The issue of damages, I -- as I understand the law of the Ninth 26 Circuit, I do not have authority to impose punitive damages. If 27 I did, I probably would, but I don't."

28 Ocwen timely appealed the Sanctions Order.

1 E. The motion for reconsideration

2 Ocwen filed a motion for reconsideration of the Sanctions
3 Order ("Motion for Reconsideration") under Civil Rule 59(e), made 4 applicable in bankruptcy through Rule 9023. It argued that it
5 made far fewer calls to the Marinos than the one hundred calls 6 that the court had found and that it did not provide any rebuttal 7 evidence at trial because the Marinos did not raise the issue of 8 telephone calls until late in the proceedings.

9 Ocwen contended that it had "newly discovered" evidence in 10 the form of Ocwen's call logs. It provided the affidavit of a 11 loan analyst for Ocwen who testified that Ocwen made thirty-five 12 calls to the Marinos post-discharge.

13 The bankruptcy court denied the Motion for Reconsideration 14 by form order ("Reconsideration Order") without any detailed 15 reasoning. Although the court apparently held a hearing on the 16 Motion for Reconsideration, a transcript of the hearing is not in 17 the record on appeal.

18 Ocwen amended its notice of appeal to include the 19 Reconsideration Order.

20 JURISDICTION

21 The bankruptcy court had jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C.
22 §§ 1334 and 157(b)(1). We have jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C.
23 § 158.

24 ISSUES

25 (1) Whether the bankruptcy court erred in awarding the 26 Marinos $119,000 for violations of the discharge injunction.

27 (2) Whether the bankruptcy court erred in holding that it 28 lacked the authority to award punitive damages.

STANDARDS OF REVIEW

2 We review de novo questions of law, including whether the 3 bankruptcy court applied the correct legal standard. See
4 Drummond v. Welsh (In re Welsh), 465 B.R. 843, 847 (9th Cir. BAP
5 2012), aff'd, 711 F.3d 1120 (9th Cir. 2013). De novo review 6 requires that we consider a matter anew, as if no decision had 7 been rendered previously. United States v. Silverman, 861 F.2d 8 571, 576 (9th Cir. 1988).

9 The bankruptcy court's finding of a willful violation of 10 § 524 is a factual finding reviewed for clear error. Emmert v.
11 Taggart (In re Taggart), 548 B.R. 275, 286 (9th Cir. BAP 2016).
12 A finding of fact is clearly erroneous if it is illogical, 13 implausible, or without support in the record. Retz v. Samson 14 (In re Retz), 606 F.3d 1189, 1196 (9th Cir. 2010). The 15 bankruptcy court's choice among multiple plausible views of the 16 evidence cannot be clear error. United States v. Elliott, 322
17 F.3d 710, 715 (9th Cir. 2003).

18 We review for abuse of discretion the bankruptcy court's 19 decision to impose sanctions for contempt. Knupfer v. Lindblade 20 (In re Dyer), 322 F.3d 1178, 1191 (9th Cir. 2003); Nash v. Clark
21 Cty. Dist. Atty's Office (In re Nash), 464 B.R. 874, 878 (9th 22 Cir. BAP 2012). Similarly, we review the bankruptcy court's 23 denial of a motion for reconsideration for abuse of discretion.
24 Cruz v. Stein Strauss Tr. #1361, PDQ Invs., LLC (In re Cruz), 516
25 B.R. 594, 601 (9th Cir. BAP 2014) (citing Tracht Gut, LLC v. Cty.
26 of L.A. Treasurer & Tax Collector (In re Tracht Gut, LLC), 503 27 B.R. 804, 810 (9th Cir. BAP 2014)). To determine whether the 28 bankruptcy court has abused its discretion, we conduct a two-step

1 inquiry: (1) we review de novo whether the bankruptcy court
2 “identified the correct legal rule to apply to the relief
3 requested” and (2) if it did, whether the bankruptcy court’s 4 application of the legal standard was illogical, implausible, or 5 without support in inferences that may be drawn from the facts in 6 the record. United States v. Hinkson, 585 F.3d 1247, 1262-63 &
7 n.21 (9th Cir. 2009) (en banc).

8 DISCUSSION

9 A. Ocwen’s appeal

10 1. The bankruptcy court may sanction a creditor that 11 knowingly and willfully violates the discharge injunction.

12 Section 727(a) provides that, absent certain exceptions, 13 “[t]he [bankruptcy] court shall grant the debtor a discharge.”
14 The discharge order “discharges the debtor from all debts that 15 arose before the date of the [bankruptcy filing].” § 727(b).
16 More specifically, a discharge “operates as an injunction against 17 the commencement or continuation of an action, the employment of 18 process, or an act, to collect, recover or offset any such debt
19 as a personal liability of the debtor, whether or not discharge 20 of such debt is waived[.]” § 524(a)(2).

21 “A party who knowingly violates the discharge injunction 22 under § 524(a)(2) can be held in contempt under § 105(a).” In re 23 Taggart, 548 B.R. at 286. The Ninth Circuit follows a two-part 24 test to determine whether the contemnor knowingly and willfully
25 committed a violation of the discharge injunction: “the movant 26 must prove that the creditor (1) knew the discharge injunction 27 was applicable and (2) intended the actions which violated the 28 injunction.” Zilog, Inc. v. Corning (In re Zilog, Inc.), 450

1 F.3d 996, 1007 (9th Cir. 2006) (quoting Renwick v. Bennett (In re
2 Bennett), 298 F.3d 1059, 1069 (9th Cir. 2002)).

3 First, the movant must prove that the contemnor knew that 4 the discharge injunction was applicable to his claim:

5 [T]he Ninth Circuit has crafted a strict standard for 6 the actual knowledge requirement in the context of 7 contempt before a finding of willfulness can be made.
8 This standard requires evidence showing the alleged 9 contemnor was aware of the discharge injunction and 10 aware that it applied to his or her claim. Whether a 11 party is aware that the discharge injunction is 12 applicable to his or her claim is a fact-based inquiry 13 which implicates a party's subjective belief, even an 14 unreasonable one.

15 In re Taggart, 548 B.R. 288.

16 Second, the contemnor must have intended the action that 17 violated the injunction. "The focus is on whether the creditor's 18 conduct violated the injunction and whether that conduct was 19 intentional; it does not require a specific intent to violate the 20 injunction." Desert Pine Villas Homeowners Ass'n v. Kabiling (In 21 re Kabiling), 551 B.R. 440, 445 (9th Cir. BAP 2016). We have 22 stated:

23 the analysis concerning a "willful" violation of the 24 discharge injunction is the same as a finding of 25 willfulness in connection with violation of the 26 automatic stay under § 365(k). In connection with the 27 second prong's intent requirement, we have previously 28 observed that "the bankruptcy court's focus is not on the offending party's subjective beliefs or intent, but on whether the party's conduct in fact complied with the order at issue."

29 In re Taggart, 548 B.R. at 288 (quoting Rosales v. Wallace (In re
30 Wallace), BAP No. NV-11-1681-KiPaD, 2012 WL 2401871, at *5 (9th 31 Cir. BAP June 26, 2012)).

32 "The standard for finding a party in civil contempt is well 33 settled: The moving party has the burden of showing by clear and

1 convincing evidence that the contemnors violated a specific and 2 definite order of the court. The burden then shifts to the 3 contemnors to demonstrate why they were unable to comply.” Id.
4 at 286 (quoting In re Bennett, 298 F.3d at 1069). “[E]ach prong 5 of the Ninth Circuit’s two-part test for a finding of contempt in 6 the context of a discharge violation requires a different 7 analysis, and distinct, clear, and convincing evidence supporting 8 that analysis, before a finding of willfulness can be made. This 9 is consistent with the Ninth Circuit’s reluctance to hold an 10 unwitting creditor in contempt.” Id. at 288 (citation and 11 internal quotation marks omitted).

12 2. The bankruptcy court did not err in finding that 13 Ocwen’s communication with the Marinos knowingly and 14 willfully violated the discharge injunction.

15 In the present case, there is no dispute that Ocwen knew 16 that the discharge injunction was applicable to its claim and 17 that it intentionally sent the letters and placed the phone 18 calls. Rather, Ocwen argues that its contacts with the Marinos 19 did not violate the discharge injunction. We hold that both the 20 written correspondence and the telephone calls were knowing and 21 willful violations.

22 a. The bankruptcy court properly found that the 23 written correspondence violated the discharge 24 injunction.

25 The discharge has long been an important feature of American 26 bankruptcy law. Over eighty years ago, the Supreme Court 27 described its purpose and importance:

28 One of the primary purposes of the Bankruptcy Act is to relieve the honest debtor from the weight of oppressive indebtedness, and permit him to start afresh free from the obligations and responsibilities consequent upon business misfortunes. This purpose of the act has been

1 again and again emphasized by the courts as being of 2 public as well as private interest, in that it gives to 3 the honest but unfortunate debtor who surrenders for 4 distribution the property which he owns at the time of 5 bankruptcy, a new opportunity in life and a clear field 6 for future effort, unhampered by the pressure and discouragement of pre-existing debt. The various provisions of the Bankruptcy Act were adopted in the light of that view and are to be construed when reasonably possible in harmony with it so as to effectuate the general purpose and policy of the act.

7 Local Loan Co. v. Hunt, 292 U.S. 234, 244-45 (1934) (citations 8 and internal quotation marks omitted).

9 The discharge is automatic and self-effectuating. Creditors
10 must obey it, even if debtors do not assert it. Pavelich v.
11 McCormick, Barstow, Sheppard, Wayte & Carruth LLP (In re 12 Pavelich), 229 B.R. 777, 781-82 (9th Cir. BAP 1999).

13 The discharge prohibits not just litigation, but also 14 informal collection activities, such as dunning notices and 15 telephone calls. See In re Feldmeier, 335 B.R. 807, 813 (Bankr.
16 D. Or. 2005) ("Among the collection activity prohibited by the 17 discharge injunction are 'telephone calls, letters, and personal 18 contacts.'" (citation omitted)).

19 The discharge has one important limit: it bars only efforts 20 to collect debts "as a personal liability of the debtor."
21 § 524(a)(2). This means that secured creditors can foreclose
22 their liens after the discharge is entered. Johnson v. Home 23 State Bank, 501 U.S. 78, 83 (1991) (explaining that a discharge 24 extinguishes only the personal liability of the debtor, and that 25 a creditor's right to foreclose on a mortgage securing the debt 26 survives or passes through the bankruptcy).

27 This creates some tension. While the discharge generally 28 prohibits creditors from communicating with discharged debtors in

1 an effort to extract payment, lienholders usually must 2 communicate with debtors in order to enforce their liens. For 3 example, a foreclosure of a mortgage without notice to the 4 mortgagor would likely be invalid even if the mortgagor were not 5 personally liable for the mortgage debt.

6 The way to reconcile this tension is to hold that a 7 lienholder may communicate with a discharged debtor only to the 8 extent necessary to preserve or enforce its lien rights, and may 9 not attempt to induce the debtor to pay the debt. As we have 10 held, "the creditor may not use a contact to 'coerce' or 'harass' 11 the debtor." In re Nash, 464 B.R. at 881; see United States v.
12 Holmes (In re Holmes), BAP No. CC-94-2001-HMV, 76 A.F.T.R.2d 13 95-7925 (9th Cir. BAP 1995) ("A secured creditor cannot, under 14 the guise of enforcing an unvoided lien, attempt to coerce the 15 debtor into paying a discharged debt. . . . Even if a creditor 16 threatens only to enforce its surviving lien, that threat will 17 violate the discharge injunction if the evidence shows that the 18 threat is really an effort to coerce payment of the underlying 19 discharged debt." (citations omitted)).

20 We agree with the bankruptcy court that Ocwen's 21 communications went far beyond what was necessary to protect or 22 enforce Ocwen's lien rights and that they also were meant to 23 induce the Marinos to make payments post-discharge. The notices 24 and statements gave the impression that the Marinos were still 25 liable for the mortgage payments, taxes, and force-placed 26 insurance premiums. Even if some of the notices may not have 27 violated the discharge injunction, the bankruptcy court correctly 28 noted that the cumulative effect of all of the letters demanding

1 money created the perception that the Marinos needed to pay
2 Ocwen. See In re Nordlund, 494 B.R. 507, 519 (Bankr. E.D. Cal.
3 2011) ("Even though some of [the bank's] written communications 4 to the debtors seem innocuous, when [the bank's] 24 written 5 communications over a 10-month period are considered in context 6 and as a whole, a more disturbing picture is painted. Even if 7 each letter from [the bank] had acknowledged the debtors' 8 discharge and stated that [the bank] would take no action against 9 the debtors personally to collect its three home loans, the sheer 10 volume and repetitiveness of [the bank's] letters communicated 11 just the opposite."). Therefore, the letters violated the 12 discharge injunction.

13 Ocwen argues that the disclaimer language contained in some 14 of the notices protects it from liability. We disagree.

15 First, Ocwen does not attempt to explain the fact that, of 16 the twenty-two letters it sent to the Marinos, seven had no 17 disclaimer language whatsoever.

18 Second, although Ocwen knew that the Marinos had filed for 19 bankruptcy protection and received a discharge, thirteen of the 20 fifteen letters with disclaimers spoke of bankruptcy as a 21 hypothetical possibility (e.g., "if you filed for bankruptcy and 22 your case is still active, or if you have received an order of 23 discharge, please be advised that this is not an attempt to 24 collect a prepetition or discharged debt"). Ocwen makes no 25 attempt to explain why it was proper for Ocwen to obscure the 26 fact (known to Ocwen) that the Marinos had already received a 27 discharge.

28 Third, even the small number of letters that acknowledged

1 (as Ocwen admittedly knew) that the Marinos had obtained a 2 discharge were internally contradictory. The body of these 3 letters asserts that the Marinos must pay the debt, but the 4 disclaimer placed at the end of the same documents told them that 5 they need not pay the debt. This contradiction confused the 6 Marinos and would likely confuse many similarly situated debtors.
7 Cf. In re Anderson, 348 B.R. 652, 661 (Bankr. D. Del. 2006)
8 (finding a violation of the discharge injunction where the letter 9 with disclaimer language also stated confusingly that the debtors 10 would be liable for any deficiency).

11 Fourth, Ocwen makes no effort to explain why it sent 12 admittedly "generic" notices to the Marinos. In this modern age 13 of information technology, Ocwen could and should prepare notices 14 that are consistent with the known legal status of its borrowers.
15 Ocwen's failure to do so must reflect either incompetence (which 16 we doubt) or a deliberate effort to induce confused borrowers to 17 pay discharged debts. Similarly, it was probably no accident 18 that the improper demands for payment appear near the beginning 19 of each letter and the disclaimers appear near the end.

20 Ocwen also argues that state or federal law required it to 21 send some of the correspondence. If it were true that state or 22 federal law required Ocwen to send all of the various letters as 23 a condition to the preservation or enforcement of its lien 24 rights, we might agree. But the premise is not valid.

25 First, Ocwen could not cite any law that authorized some of 26 its correspondence.

27 Second, some of the statutes and regulations cited by Ocwen
28 simply do not apply to its correspondence. For example, Ocwen

1 cites 15 U.S.C. § 1692g(a) to excuse the debt validation notices
2 sent by Western Progressive (on Ocwen's behalf), but the Fair 3 Debt Collection Practices Act generally does not apply to 4 mortgage foreclosures. See Ho v. ReconTrust Co., NA, 858 F.3d
5 568, 572 (9th Cir. 2017) ("actions taken to facilitate a 6 non-judicial foreclosure, such as sending the notice of default 7 and notice of sale, are not attempts to collect 'debt' as that 8 term is defined by the FDCPA").

9 Third, even when Ocwen sent legally required notices, it 10 routinely embellished those notices with demands for payment that 11 the applicable statutes and regulations do not require. For 12 example, 12 C.F.R. § 1024.37(c) requires that a mortgage lender 13 give notice of force-placed insurance; Ocwen added a demand for 14 payment of the insurance premiums. Similarly, the escrow account 15 notices not only provided information as to account balances in 16 accordance with 12 U.S.C. §§ 2605 and 2609, but also informed the 17 Marinos that, if the they did not pay the shortage, their escrow
18 shortfall would increase. Additionally, the debt validation 19 notices allegedly sent pursuant to 15 U.S.C. § 1692g provided 20 information of the "total delinquency owed" and stated in large 21 type that "WE ARE ATTEMPTING TO COLLECT A DEBT[.]" As the 22 bankruptcy court aptly stated, Ocwen's notices may have been 23 proper had they been limited to the required information mandated 24 by the statutes and regulations; however, Ocwen invariably 25 included a demand for payment that the Marinos were not legally 26 obligated to make. Ocwen's inclusion of additional language not 27 prescribed by the relevant statutes or regulations violated the 28 discharge injunction.

1 Ocwen cites California Civil Code §§ 2924(a)(1)(A), 2 2923.5(a)(2), and 2924.9, which require it to contact borrowers
3 before and after filing a notice of default. These notices were 4 sent amidst the improper collection notices that demanded
5 payment, so it was not unreasonable for the Marinos to believe 6 that the letters were further attempts to collect on the debt.
7 Cf. In re Nordlund, 494 B.R. at 519 ("Taken together, and in 8 context, the court construes the 24 letters as a deliberate 9 attempt by [the bank] to sow confusion and doubt as to whether it 10 would recognize the debtors' discharge. Its goal seems to have 11 been to convince the debtors to pay the bank despite their 12 discharge.").

13 In sum, the bankruptcy court did not clearly err in finding 14 that "Ocwen could not have been doing anything but trying to get 15 the debtor to give them some more money" Ocwen's
16 repeated dunning deprived the Marinos of a fresh start 17 "unhampered by the pressure and discouragement of pre-existing 18 debt." See Local Loan Co., 292 U.S. at 244.

19 b. The bankruptcy court properly considered the 20 telephone calls in its award of damages.

21 Ocwen also argues that the bankruptcy court should not have 22 considered the telephone calls that it made to the Marinos, 23 because (1) the issue of calls was not raised in the Motion for 24 Contempt, and (2) the evidence provided on reconsideration shows 25 that Ocwen made only thirty-five post-discharge calls, rather 26 than the one hundred calls found by the court. We reject both 27
28

1 arguments.¹⁰

2 Ocwen is correct that the Motion for Contempt focused 3 exclusively on the written correspondence. However, Ocwen was on 4 notice that the Marinos sought sanctions for violation of the 5 discharge injunction; it should reasonably have known that the 6 trial could span all instances of improper contact with the 7 Marinos. Indeed, Ocwen's representative, Sony Prudent, testified 8 that he had reviewed the contact logs, including telephone calls, 9 in preparation for trial.

10 Moreover, Ocwen never objected during trial to any testimony 11 regarding telephone calls. Thus, it waived any such objection.
12 Hansen v. Moore (In re Hansen), 368 B.R. 868, 875 (9th Cir. BAP 13 2007) ("A party who fails to object to evidence at trial waives 14 the right to raise admissibility issues on appeal." (citing Price 15 v. Kramer, 200 F.3d 1237, 1251-52 (9th Cir. 2000))).

16 The Marinos introduced evidence at trial that Ocwen 17 repeatedly called them to request payment, even though they 18 understandably could not offer a definite number of calls.

19 _____
20 ¹⁰ Ocwen does not argue on appeal that the court erred in 21 finding that the calls violated the discharge injunction. While 22 we note that California state law requires the creditor to 23 attempt to contact the debtor concerning the default, see Cal.
24 Civ. Code § 2923.5, the only evidence in the record about the 25 content of the phone calls is the Marinos' and Ms. O'Kane's 26 testimony about repeated demands for payment. There is no
27 evidence that the content of the calls complied with the state 28 statutes. Ocwen did not offer a script that it requires its staff to use or any other evidence of what its staff said during the calls. Rather, it appears that the calls simply and repeatedly demanded payment post-discharge. Nor does it appear that a so-called "mini-Miranda warning," if given, would bring Ocwen's telephone calls into compliance, inasmuch as the FDCPA generally does not apply to foreclosure proceedings.

1 Mrs. Marino testified that Ocwen called three to five times a day
2 for a year; that she did not pick up all of Ocwen's calls because 3 she did not want to be harassed; that she may have answered
4 twenty of the calls; and that she may have received between sixty 5 to one hundred calls. Mr. Marino's and Ms. O'Kane's testimony
6 also mentioned numerous calls. At trial, Ocwen did not produce 7 any evidence regarding the number of telephone calls, other than 8 to acknowledge that it made calls to the Marinos. The court's 9 finding that Ocwen called the Marinos one hundred times was not 10 clearly erroneous.

11 In its Motion for Reconsideration, Ocwen provided the call 12 log from the Marinos' file that purported to show that Ocwen only 13 called the Marinos thirty-five times during the applicable 14 period. But "a motion for reconsideration should not be 15 granted, absent highly unusual circumstances, unless the district 16 court is presented with newly discovered evidence, committed 17 clear error, or if there is an intervening change in the 18 controlling law." A [Civil] Rule 59(e) motion may not be used to 19 raise arguments or present evidence for the first time when they 20 could reasonably have been raised earlier in the litigation."
21 Kona Enters., Inc. v. Estate of Bishop, 229 F.3d 877, 890 (9th 22 Cir. 2000) (quoting 389 Orange St. Partners v. Arnold, 179 F.3d
23 656, 665 (9th Cir. 1999)). The call logs were available to Ocwen 24 prior to trial and were referenced by Ocwen's witness; the 25 bankruptcy court even expressed its displeasure that Ocwen did 26 not introduce the call logs into evidence but only relied on 27 Mr. Prudent's testimony about their contents. The logs were not 28 "newly discovered evidence" within the meaning of Civil Rule

1 59(e). See Feature Realty, Inc. v. City of Spokane, 331 F.3d
2 1082, 1093 (9th Cir. 2003) ("Evidence 'in the possession of the 3 party before the judgment was rendered is not newly discovered.'" " 4 (citation omitted)).

5 There is another independently sufficient reason to affirm.
6 Ocwen failed to provide us with a transcript of the hearing on 7 the Motion for Reconsideration. See Clinton v. Deutsche Bank
8 Nat'l Tr. Co. (In re Clinton), 449 B.R. 79, 83 (9th Cir. BAP
9 2011) ("Without a transcript, it is impossible to determine why 10 the bankruptcy court ruled as it did. Therefore, we have little 11 choice but to exercise our discretion and summarily affirm the 12 bankruptcy court's decision[.]").

13 3. The damages were reasonable and supported by the 14 evidence.

15 Ocwen argues that the $119,000 award is not reasonable, 16 because the award was arbitrary and the court ignored other 17 causes of the Marinos' emotional distress. We disagree.

18 The Ninth Circuit has allowed emotional distress damages for 19 automatic stay violations when the debtor "(1) suffer[s]
20 significant harm, (2) clearly establish[es] the significant harm, 21 and (3) demonstrate[s] a causal connection between that 22 significant harm and the violation of the automatic stay (as 23 distinct, for instance, from the anxiety and pressures inherent 24 in the bankruptcy process)." Snowden v. Check Into Cash of Wash.
25 Inc. (In re Snowden), 769 F.3d 651, 657 (9th Cir. 2014) (quoting 26 Dawson v. Wash. Mutual Bank, F.A. (In re Dawson), 390 F.3d 1139, 27 1149 (9th Cir. 2004)) (discussing violation of the automatic 28 stay). The same rule should apply to violations of the discharge

1 injunction. See In re Nordlund, 494 B.R. at 523 (applying
2 Dawson's three-part test to violations of the discharge
3 injunction); C & W Asset Acquisition, LLC v. Feagins (In re 4 Feagins), 439 B.R. 165, 178 (Bankr. D. Haw. 2010) ("Although 5 Dawson considered the remedy for violations of the automatic stay 6 under section 362(k)(1), the same reasoning applies to willful 7 violations of the discharge injunction.").

8 Ocwen contends that the bankruptcy court's award of $1,000 9 per contact was arbitrary and that the total award should not 10 have exceeded "several thousand dollars" in accordance with Dyer.
11 But Ocwen ignores the fact that the bankruptcy court awarded 12 compensatory damages for emotional distress, not punitive 13 sanctions. The limit on punitive sanctions discussed in Dyer¹¹
14 does not apply to a compensatory award.

15 Ocwen also argues that the Marinos' emotional distress 16 predated the post-discharge communications and was not caused by 17 its violation of the discharge injunction. But the Marinos and 18 Ms. O'Kane testified that the Marinos' health and relationship 19

21 ¹¹ Ocwen cites In re Martinez, 561 B.R. 132, 173 (Bankr. D.
22 Nev. 2016), for the proposition that a "$1,000 per violation 23 figure can be arbitrary as it does not take into account the 24 circumstances of the individual victim, and therefore, would not 25 compensate for the actual damages suffered." But the Martinez 26 court also stated that "[a] $1,000 per violation figure can be 27 too high in some cases, but too low in others. Repeated attempts 28 by a creditor to collect a discharged debt may cause little concern to an individual who is represented by effective bankruptcy counsel, but may be gut wrenching to a pro se debtor who thought he had received a fresh start." Id. at 173 n.47. In this case, the bankruptcy court heard testimony from the Marinos about how Ocwen's violations affected them. The court's award did "take into account the circumstances of" the Marinos.

1 improved after they filed for bankruptcy but deteriorated again
2 when Ocwen began contacting them post-discharge. The bankruptcy
3 court weighed the evidence and determined that Ocwen's violation 4 of the discharge injunction caused the Marinos' injury. The 5 court did not clearly err in assigning blame to Ocwen.

6 B. The Marinos' cross-appeal

7 The Marinos argue that the court erred by failing to award 8 punitive damages, because it erroneously believed that it lacked 9 authority to do so. The bankruptcy court misstated the law.

10 While the Ninth Circuit has stated that the bankruptcy
11 courts are prohibited from assessing any "serious" punitive 12 damages, it has left open the possibility of "relatively mild 13 noncompensatory fines." In re Dyer, 322 F.3d at 1193. We have 14 previously stated that, "[i]f a bankruptcy court finds that a 15 party has willfully violated the discharge injunction, the court 16 may award actual damages, punitive damages and attorney's fees to 17 the debtor." In re Nash, 464 B.R. at 880 (citing Espinosa v.
18 United Student Aid Funds, Inc., 553 F.3d 1193, 1205 n.7 (9th Cir.
19 2008), aff'd, 559 U.S. 260 (2010)).

20 Ocwen concedes that the bankruptcy court may award sanctions 21 and that relatively mild noncompensatory fines may be permissible 22 under some circumstances, but it argues that the bankruptcy court 23 may not award punitive damages.

24 Some bankruptcy courts understand Dyer to mean that a 25 bankruptcy court may not allow "punitive damages" for a violation 26 of the discharge injunction but may award "relatively mild 27 noncompensatory fines." See, e.g., In re Martinez, 561 B.R. at 28 175 ("this court has no authority to award punitive damages for a

1 violation of the Discharge Injunction, but it does have authority
2 to award mildly [sic], non-compensatory fines in appropriate 3 circumstances"); In re Dickerson, 510 B.R. 289, 298 (Bankr. D.
4 Idaho 2014) ("in general, punitive damages are not an appropriate 5 remedy for § 105(a) contempt proceedings, [but] relatively mild 6 noncompensatory fines may be acceptable in some circumstances").
7 Other courts have held that a bankruptcy court may award
8 "punitive damages," so long as the amount is "relatively mild."
9 See, e.g., Rosales v. Wallace (In re Wallace), BAP No.
10 NV-11-1681-KiPaD, 2012 WL 2401871, at *8 (9th Cir. BAP June 26, 11 2012) (recognizing that, under Dyer, "such punitive sanctions 12 cannot be 'serious'"). We do not see any meaningful difference 13 between "punitive damages" and "noncompensatory fines." The 14 Ninth Circuit has authorized "noncompensatory fines," which are 15 simply punitive damages by another name. However labeled, any 16 such award must be "relatively mild."¹²

17 It was thus an error for the bankruptcy court to preclude 18 itself from considering an award of punitive damages. We do not 19 hold that the bankruptcy court must award a fine or punitive 20 damages, but we remand so that the bankruptcy court can consider 21 whether to do so.

22 Alternatively, the bankruptcy court might choose to issue
23 proposed findings and a recommended judgment on punitive damages
24

25 ¹² The Ninth Circuit left open the question of what is a 26 "serious" punitive sanction but implied that any fine above
27 $5,000 (presumably in 1989 dollars) would be considered 28 "serious." In re Dyer, 322 F.3d at 1193 (citing F.J. Hanshaw Enters., Inc. v. Emerald River Dev., Inc., 244 F.3d 1128, 1139
n.10 (9th Cir. 2001)).

1 to the district court or refer the matter to the district court
2 for criminal contempt proceedings. See, e.g., Exec. Benefits
3 Ins. Agency v. Arkison, 134 S. Ct. 2165, 2173 (2014) (When faced 4 with "core" claims that cannot be adjudicated by the bankruptcy 5 court under Stern v. Marshall, 564 U.S. 462 (2011), "[t]he 6 bankruptcy court should hear the proceeding and submit proposed 7 findings of fact and conclusions of law to the district court for 8 de novo review and entry of judgment."); In re Dyer, 322 F.3d at 9 1194 n.17 ("We do not preclude the possibility that a bankruptcy 10 court could initiate criminal contempt proceedings by referring 11 alleged contempt to the district court. Nor do we address 12 whether the district court could refer those proceedings back to 13 the bankruptcy court if the parties so consented."). The 14 restriction on the bankruptcy court's power to grant punitive 15 damages and punish contempt stems from the fact that bankruptcy 16 judges lack life tenure. District judges do not face that 17 restriction. See In re Dyer, 322 F.3d at 1194.

18 CONCLUSION

19 For the foregoing reasons, the bankruptcy court did not err 20 in awarding the Marinos damages for Ocwen's willful violations of 21 the discharge injunction but erred when it held that it lacked 22 the authority to award any punitive damages. We therefore AFFIRM 23 IN PART and VACATE and REMAND IN PART the Sanctions Order and 24 AFFIRM the Reconsideration Order.
